
Premise: Communication

 Authors' Notes

Time always seems to fly by when visiting with friends and family, but under certain conditions, this old adage doesn't always prove true.

— David Van Houten

I have always had strange and wonderful dreams. I was lucky (or unlucky) to remember this one so vividly.

A cohort in my local writers' group alerted me to your publication, and I was most intrigued by your Target Theme concept. The "Ten Minutes" premise especially captured my attention because of my interest in the actions of athletes working against a time clock. How they succeed, or fail, while dealing with the pressure is fascinating to behold.

A comment bout Marvin Thrasher's story, from his son

It is a fitting tribute that one last story will appear following his death. I know he will be watching over your shoulder as you put it into print.
